

What does it mean to be nobody?

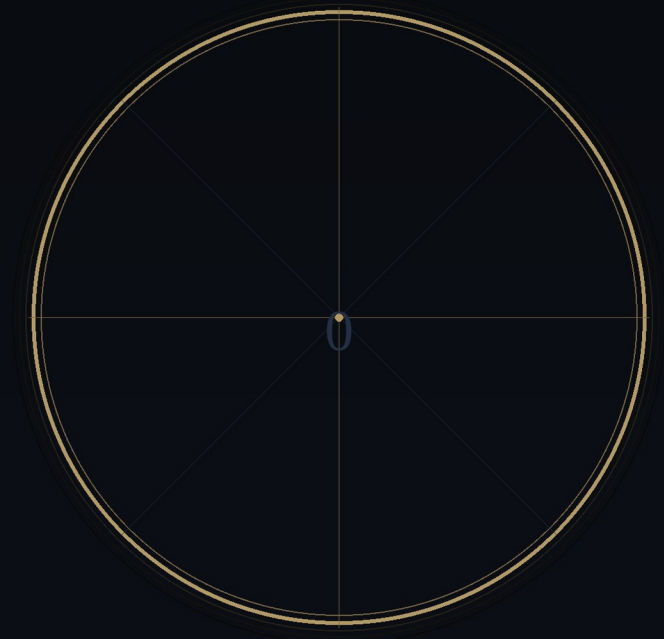

In the green shadows of Wadala, Mumbai, at 6am, the trees whisper a name: Shunya. Zero. The blank slate. The undefined.

This is the story of a man who walked away from a career, a relationship, and every conventional measure of success — not in defeat, but in pursuit of the only identity that could not be taken from him.

Through the politics of an advertising firm, the solitude of a writing desk, and the tidal rhythms of the Arabian Sea, he discovers that anonymity is not absence. It is the condition of all creation.

Anonymity is Harsh Maskara's most quietly radical work yet.

Harsh Maskara is a Kolkata-based writer and researcher. His work is raw, unconventional and deeply personal — drawn from his own experience of mania, recovery and reinvention. He is the author of Making Friends with Mania, Eagles Fly Alone, Deliberate, Naked and Asylum.
